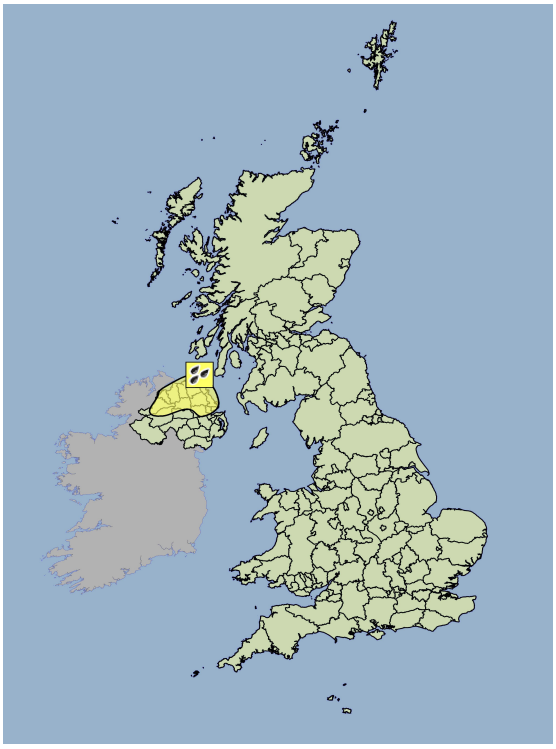
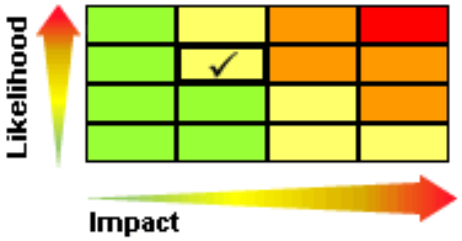
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Light winds across Northern Ireland today will allow heavy showers and thunderstorms to become slow-moving, perhaps giving in excess of 30 mm of rainfall in 2 to 3 hours and bringing a risk of minor surface water flooding. This is most likely across northern areas later this afternoon and early evening, with the showers then clearing later in the evening.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 12:35 on Mon, 29th Jul 2013 until 20:00 on Mon, 29th Jul 2013

Heavy, slow moving and thundery showers are expected to develop across Northern Ireland this afternoon bringing the risk of some torrential downpours, particularly across northern areas.

The public should be aware of the potential for localised flooding, with standing water and spray on roads also possible.
